

Love & Basketball: No Look Pass Gets 2nd Screening at Outfest [Culturelicious]

Author: Arturo R. Garcia

July 13, 2011

Like many college basketball players, Emily Tay's quest to keep her career going led her to Europe. But her journey on the court is just a part of her story, and No Look Pass, which premiered this past weekend at Outfest in Los Angeles, captures the remarkable pressures Tay faces in her life, and not just as a basketball player.

The film chronicles Tay's transition from starring at Harvard, where she was named the Ivy League's Player of the Week three times as a senior and singled rival Yale with 34 points in her final game, to starting her professional career in Germany, a decision which puts her at odds with her parents, who expect Emily to enter an arranged marriage. What her parents don't know, though, is that Emily is gay. Her romantic life faces another challenge in Germany, where she begins a relationship with a U.S. servicewoman.

Because the film's July 9 premiere sold out, a second showing has been added:

When: July 17

Where: Directors Guild of America

7920 Sunset Blvd, West Hollywood